

J.A. Belzen

Towards Cultural Psychology of Religion

Principles, Approaches, Applications

Springer

Towards Cultural Psychology of Religion

Jacob A. Belzen

Towards Cultural Psychology of Religion

Principles, Approaches, Applications

 Springer

Jacob A. Belzen
Faculty of Humanities
University of Amsterdam
Oude Turfmarkt 147
1012 GC Amsterdam
The Netherlands
belzen@hum.uva.nl

ISBN 978-90-481-3490-8 e-ISBN 978-90-481-3491-5
DOI 10.1007/978-90-481-3491-5
Springer Dordrecht Heidelberg London New York

Library of Congress Control Number: 2010922791

© Springer Science+Business Media B.V. 2010

No part of this work may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, microfilming, recording or otherwise, without written permission from the Publisher, with the exception of any material supplied specifically for the purpose of being entered and executed on a computer system, for exclusive use by the purchaser of the work.

Printed on acid-free paper

Springer is part of Springer Science+Business Media (www.springer.com)

Acknowledgements

Although none of the chapters in this book have ever been published in their present form, parts of them draw significantly on papers that were previously published. I am grateful to the publishers for granting permission to re-use material from the following publications:

Chapter 2

The historicocultural approach in the psychology of religion: Perspectives for interdisciplinary research. Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1997, 36, 358–371. (Oxford: Wiley-Blackwell.)

Chapter 3

Cultural psychology of religion: Profile of an interdisciplinary approach. Research in the Social Scientific Study of Religion, 2009, 20, 103–129. (Leiden: Brill.)

Chapter 4

The cultural-psychological approach to religion: Contemporary debates on the object of the discipline. Theory and Psychology, 1999, 9, 229–256. (London: Sage.)

Chapter 5

Methodological issues in the psychology of religion: Towards another paradigm? Journal of Psychology, 2006, 140, 5–28. (Washington: Heldref.)

Chapter 6

Studying the specificity of spirituality: Lessons from the psychology of religion. Mental Health, Religion and Culture, 2009, 12, 205–222. (London: Routledge.)

Chapter 7

Methodological concerns in the psychology of religion: Continuities, losses and transforming perspectives. Religion, 2005, 35, 137–165. (Oxford: Elsevier.)

Chapter 8

Culture and the ‘dialogical self’: Toward a secular cultural psychology of religion. In: Straub, J., Weidemann, D., Kölbl, C., & Zielke, B. (Eds.) (2006), Pursuit of Meaning: Advances in Cultural and Cross-Cultural Psychology (pp. 129–152). (Bielefeld: Transcript.)

Chapter 9

Religion as embodiment: Cultural-psychological concepts and methods in the study of conversion among “Bevindelijken”. Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1999, 38, 236–253. (Oxford: Wiley-Blackwell.)

Chapter 10

Religion, culture and psychopathology. Cultural-psychological reflections on religion in a case of manslaughter in The Netherlands. Pastoral Psychology, 2000, 48, 415–435. (New York: Springer.)

Chapter 11

Psychic functioning and mental health: The role of religion in personal life. In: Belzen, J.A., & Geels, A. (Eds.) (2008), Autobiography and the Psychological Study of Religious lives (pp. 117–157). Amsterdam-New York: Rodopi (International Series in the Psychology of Religion, Volume 15.)

Chapter 12

Religion and social order – psychological factors in Dutch pillarization, especially among the Calvinists. In: Belzen, J.A. (Ed.) (2001), Psychohistory in Psychology of Religion: Interdisciplinary Studies (pp. 205–238). Amsterdam-New York: Rodopi. (International Series in the Psychology of Religion, Volume 12.)

Preface

The aims pursued in this book are quite modest. The text is not an introduction in the traditional sense to any psychological subdiscipline or field of application, nor does it present anything essentially new. Rather, it shows ‘work in progress’, as it attempts to contribute to an integration of two differently structured, but already existing fields within psychology. In order to explain this, it is probably best to say a few words about how the book came into being and about what it hopes to achieve.

As a project, the volume owes very much to others. While lecturing in places ranging from South Africa to Canada and from California through European countries to Korea, colleagues have often urged me to come up with a volume on ‘cultural psychology of religion’. For reasons that should become clear in the text, I feel uncomfortable with such a demand. To my understanding, there exists no single cultural psychology of religion. Rather, there are ever expanding numbers of divergent types of psychologies, some of which are applied to understanding religious aspects of human lives or to researching specific religious phenomena, while others are not. Within this heterogeneous field that is, correctly or not, still designated as ‘psychology’, there are also many approaches that are sometimes referred to as ‘cultural psychology’ or as ‘culturally sensitive psychologies’. It would be worthwhile applying many of these to research on religious phenomena, but at present not too many are in fact so applied.

As I resisted the idea of writing an ‘introduction’, a ‘handbook’ or a ‘companion’ to cultural psychologies of religion, Joao Edenio Reis Valle and Marcio Fabri, both from Sao Paulo, suggested I should at least bring together a number of previously published papers in which I advocate cultural psychological approaches to the study of religion and that offer a specimen of the kind of interdisciplinary work I envision. Indeed, this is what this collection attempts: it tries, through a number of essays that may each be read separately, to serve as an ‘appetizer’ to possible ways of doing cultural psychology of religion. It hopes to make the reader aware of the possibility of applying cultural psychological approaches within the psychology of religion, and it hopes to stimulate others to indulge in this type of research. The volume owes much to the anonymous reviewers of the manuscript and to the editors of journals and other media in which the various chapters were initially published, as well as to comments made at the final stage by Ray Paloutzian, Ulrike Popp-Baier, Hessel Zondag and others. Supporters of the project from the field of cultural psychology include Carl Ratner, Jürgen Straub and Jaan Valsiner, all of whom I gratefully acknowledge.

A volume like this has limitations of several kinds. Many such limitations are due to the person of the author. Colleagues from especially the USA have often remarked how different the kind of work represented here is from what is being done in so-called mainstream psychology in the USA. The work is seen as European, and if it is true I am grateful for it and proud of it. Yet, whether I like it or not, it also has to be admitted that throughout the work it will remain visible that the author is Dutch, educated and trained primarily in the Netherlands, doing research mainly in that country. None of this, however, is a problem within the type of psychological knowledge and research represented here: as all knowledge is limited and situated, so is everything that is offered and proposed here. Cultural psychologists do not strive for universally valid knowledge: such is left to other branches of scholarship, working on such foundations of human psychic functioning as may be analyzed using natural science approaches. Cultural psychology does not deny or trivialize such foundations. But it does remind us of the limits that inevitably go with such approaches as well: for next to being impossible without genetic, neurological, chemical and many other foundations approachable by natural sciences, psychic phenomena are instigated and regulated by cultural conditions, determinations and limitations to human conduct, such as conventions, norms, beliefs, practices and many others more. Cultural psychologists urge their colleagues in other fields not to forget about these, but to come up with types of knowledge additional to those discovered by psychologists collaborating with neurologists or geneticists. By consequence, the type of knowledge cultural psychologists provided is valid first and foremost (and sometimes even only) at the place and at the moment it was developed. Therefore, what this book has to offer is not a paradigm of how to do cultural psychological research on whatever religion wherever on the planet. It does not offer a recipe at all, but rather an appetizer: it provides an invitation to take notice of and to get involved in this kind of research, by offering examples of how cultural psychological approaches can be applied to the study of specific forms of religion. That these examples deal largely with the so-called gereformeerden (Reformed, a subclass of Calvinism) in the Netherlands has mainly to do with my situatedness as a researcher and an author: the Reformed have been and continue to constitute an important, in itself not homogeneous, religious subculture in the Netherlands, to which I myself have never belonged (nor did my family), but which I happened to come across in some of my earliest research projects and that I have some in-depth knowledge about. (And lest anyone thinks I would be particularly fond of gereformeerden, I have included in chapter 10 also an analysis of an incident they have always been embarrassed about.)

Next to gratitude for moral support provided by colleagues from many countries, this volume owes a debt also to others who helped out with many practical things, esp. to Fraser Watts, the director of the Psychology and Religion Research Group at the University of Cambridge (UK), who invited me to be a visiting Fellow during the Fall of 2008 and to shelter at Queens' College away from the many distractions from intellectual work that prevail at the University of Amsterdam. I am grateful for the opportunity to share ideas from this book with members of his Research Group and for the opportunity to see what a truly academic setting can look like.

Hopefully, this collection conveys some of the enthusiasm with which the studies have been pursued: contrary to the tendency to tailor empirical phenomena according to theoretical categories and to press them into the moulds provided by research methods, cultural psychology allows the researcher to remain close to the lived reality of subjects' lives, seeking by necessity collaboration with other approaches that try to interpret these lives and their vicissitudes. Although they are just like every other scientific and reflective approach apt to reducing complexity, cultural psychologies try to resist the tendency to reductionism found so often in research on religion and to help to deconstruct scientific prejudices and all too easy answers to all too simple questions. Paradoxically, the aims pursued by this volume will be achieved if readers put it aside as insufficient and not good enough, asking for more and for better, and are consequently inspired to try to come up with such themselves. Bon appétit!

Amsterdam, Cambridge

Jacob A. Belzen
New Year's Eve 2008

Contents

Introduction

1 Building Bridges	3
What Is Psychology of Religion?	3
Psychological Research: on Religion?.....	8
The Relationship Between Cultural Psychology and Psychology of Religion	12
Once More: The Modest Aims of This Book	16

Part I Principles

2 A Hermeneutical, Interdisciplinary Approach to the Study of Religion	23
Towards a Human Scientific Psychology of Religion?.....	23
Psychology in the Plural	24
The Object of Psychology of Religion: A Product of Culture.....	25
A Cultural-Psychological Approach	26
The Historicity of Human Subjectivity	28
The Double Perspective: Historical and Cultural	29
Variants of a Diachronic Cultural Psychology.....	30
Historical Psychology	30
Psychological Historiography	31
Psychohistory	32
Psychohistory: An Example of the Interdisciplinary Character of Cultural Psychology of Religion.....	33
3 Cultural Psychology of Religion	37
Introducing Cultural Psychology: Initial Distinctions	37
Contemporary Research in Cultural Psychology	40
On the Difference Between Cross-cultural Psychology and Cultural Psychology	40

Examples of Current Fields of Research 41

Cultural Psychology of Religion..... 43

 The Interdisciplinary Character of Cultural Psychology of Religion 43

 Theories in Contemporary Cultural Psychology and Their Application to Religion 44

 Examples..... 48

Closing Words..... 50

4 The Way Out of Contemporary Debates on the Object of the Discipline 53

 Introduction..... 53

 Debates on the Object of the Psychology of Religion:
 Tema Con Variazoni? 54

 Defensive Motives?..... 58

 The Cultural Psychological Approach: A New Vista?..... 60

 Religion and the Perspective of Cultural Psychology:
 Closing Remarks 63

Part II Approaches

5 Methodological Issues 69

 The Relationship Between Psychology of Religion and General Psychology 69

 The Role of Philosophical Presuppositions 72

 Two Methodological Mainstreams in General Psychology 73

 Hermeneutical Research as Empirical Psychology..... 77

 How to Assess Qualitative Research..... 79

 On the Psychology of Religion 80

6 When Psychology Turns to Spirituality 83

 Research on Research: A Metapsychological Perspective..... 83

 Psychology Does Not Define Spirituality 85

 What Type of Psychology Do We Need in Order to Approach Spiritual Acts and Activities?..... 88

 Hidden Agendas in the Psychology of Religion and Spirituality 90

 The Specificity of Religious and Spiritual Conduct 93

 Recommendations for Empirical Research..... 96

7 The Question of the Specificity of Religion..... 101

 Introduction: Psychology and Its Methodology..... 101

 Wundt Contra James 105

 The Varieties in Germany 106

Questionnaires and Statistics Versus Case-Studies..... 108
 Methodological Preferences in the Psychology of Religion..... 109
 Experiments Versus Questionnaires..... 112
 The Genetic Approach Versus Experiments 115
 Wundtian Psychology of Religion 118
 Problems with Wundt’s Völkerpsychologie 119
 Ongoing Debates, Regained Perspectives..... 124

8 A Cultural Psychological Promise to the Study of Religiosity:

Background and Context of the “Dialogical Self” 129
 The Dialogical Self 129
 The Origin of the Idea of Cultural Psychology..... 131
 Professional Training 131
 Personal Background 133
 Vision of Psychology 133
 The Combination of Cultural Psychology and the Psychology of Religion 134
 Cultural Psychology: Program and Preliminary Achievements 137
 Conclusions..... 140
 Deconfessionalizing of the Psychology of Religion..... 140
 Toward a Cultural Psychology of Religion..... 142

Part III Applications

9 Religion as Embodiment..... 147
 Psychology of Religion and Cultural Analysis..... 147
 The Bevindelijke Tradition..... 149
Bevindelijke Spirituality: Am I Converted...? 151
 Obstacles to Empirical Research 155
 Variants of Cultural Psychology 157
 Body, Culture and Religion..... 159
 Concluding Comments..... 162

10 Religion, Culture and Psychopathology..... 165
 Introduction: The Necessity of a Multiple Perspective..... 165
 Narrative Psychology and Analysis of Religion 168
 Kill the Devil: A Case of Religious Pathology? 170
 The Spiritual Background..... 171
 The Events in Betuwe 173
 The Role of Religion..... 176

11 Psychopathology and Religion 181
 The Role of Autobiography in Psychology 181
 The Spiritual Autobiography as Source for the Psychology
 of Religion 185

The Narrative Construction of the Self 191

Doetje’s Psychic Energy: Self-psychological Reflections 195

Psychological Hypotheses and Empirical Historical Research 203

The Function of the Autobiography for Mrs. Reinsberg 206

Religiosity in Relation to Mental Health 207

Religion and the Transformation of the Self..... 211

12 Religion and the Social Order..... 215

Introduction: “Pillarization”..... 215

The Motives Behind Pillarization 220

The Beginnings of Pillarization: Case Study – Calvinist
Mental Health Care 222

Brief History of the Calvinist Mind 227

Religion and Identity..... 232

Bibliography 239

Index..... 275